In addition to being a mecca for those in the film industry, Los Angeles is a hot spot for musical entertainers. In this big city, many versatile vocalists and musicians oscillate among stage, screen and the recording studio to make a difference and, hopefully, create a legacy. Here is a list of some of the more productive L.A.-based singer-songwriters that are now turning heads within Tinseltown's ever-changing musical landscape.

Francie Kelley

www.franciekelley.com With two albums added to her growing list of credits, singer-songwriter Francie Kelley's popularity index in elementary education hits all the right notes. The musical scribe, who recently performed with Barbra Streisand, pens children's songs that celebrate the innocence and curiosity of youth from sunrise to after moonrise. The impressionist also takes young listeners on a Disney-like adventure to pay homage to the melodic cultures of the world. Thanks to a solid background in television and musical theater, the guitarist and pianist provides parents and teachers with what they need to help nourish little brains with relevant knowledge in an entertaining manner. "Wake Up & Go To Sleep" and "Where Do You Want To Go Today?" are ready for download at Amazon.com, iTunes and CD Baby.
